

RADICAL MOB IN IREDELL.

Young Mott's Rantankerous Talk--
The Force Bill Endorsed.

It was not only in the State Convention but also in the various county conventions that the Republicans have had rows. In Iredeed, where the Republican party has more than the average of intelligence, and wealth, the convention was better than a play, and at certain stages it was a mob, says the Landmark. Its proceedings strengthened the Democrats. From the Landmark we make a few extracts:

Young Mott's Speech.

M. L. Mott spoke much. Said he did not vote the Republican ticket in 1888 because, with the exception of Judge Furches and two or three others, the men on the ticket were a disgrace to the State; they did not know a scif from a single tree and are no more fit for judges than mountebanks are for soothsayers. He declared himself in favor of the Force Bill. He was not to be frightened by the cry of nigger, nigger, and when it comes to an issue of that sort he is ready to be classed politically with the niggers. He was a bigger man, full bullet in the wood. The speech shocked Democrats but was effective of the purpose for which it was intended. The colored people greeted the different points made with "tell it!" "go over!" "go cross!" and like expressions of approval, winding up with a round of applause.

He abused George H. Brown, H. C. Cowles and T. N. Cooper vigorously, and accused them of being base ingrates and traitors.

A Colored Delegate's Talk.

A colored delegate declared that the Republicans did not treat them as well as the Democrats, and as for doing them favors, if he went to a white Republican for a favor the answer was, "I'll see you in a minute;" whereas, if he applied to a Democrat, he was told, "why, certainly, Dick; I'll do anything in God's world I can for you." This doctrine was rather strong for some of the colored brethren, and they began to call, "question!" "Oh yes," said Dick; "that's the way with you niggers. When a white man speaks you listen to him, but let a nigger get up to 'speak himself, and you say 'question!'"

How He Drinks and Gets His News.

Dr. S. Angle, of Eagle Mills, entertained the convention. He said he hadn't much to speak about because he never gets any news except when a nigger comes out to his house from Statesville. On such an occasion, he said, he takes a drink and gives the nigger a drink and then they sit down and talk and he learns what is going on. The doctor told his story about the man, the dog and the pitchfork and told it well—it gets better every time. He defended the Force Bill, denounced the State election law, and advised upon Collector Eaves for never having given him an office, and said a good deal in general.

In Favor of the Force Bill.

Resolutions favoring the Force bill were adopted unanimously.

A GOOD MAN GONE.

[Special Cor. of STATE CHRONICLE.]

Died at his home in Salisbury, on the morning of the 24th of August, William H. Overman, in his seventy ninth year, one of the oldest, best and most prominent citizens of that town. He was born in Pasquotank county, near Elizabeth City on the tenth day of May, 1812. He spent most of his life in Salisbury, where he was a prosperous and successful merchant for many years; but the war came to blight his prospects, and then, dread disease, and few men have had to undergo such terrible ordeals of trouble and affliction, and fewer have borne them with such patience and submission. A warmer, kinder, more genial heart never beat in man's bosom. He died without an enemy; everybody loved him, and he was the friend of all and indeed, he spent a fortune in helping others.

He had been a devoted member of the Methodist church for more than half a century, and Sunday morning last—the last which for more than fifty years had called him to his place in the church—the spirit of our departed friend was called to the upper sanctuary; but his ear had caught a sweeter sound from angel harps and the songs of the seraphim were gently wafting his spirit over the dark waters into the Beautiful City above.

The close of his life was calm and peaceful, and it passed away like the slow descending sun, leaving a bright halo of hope and promise behind. The light of Christian love and charity beamed from his countenance, and no murmur or complaint ever escaped his lips. Every word and act was characterized by the noble spirit of patience, submission and Christian resignation, and "all was well with him." His path was deep and abiding, and often transported him beyond this weary vale of tears to the mansions of the blest where his sainted spirit now revels in the home of God, and is reunited with dear loved ones gone before. What a blessing and inspiration his example through his life, and even in death to his family! A devoted and loving wife and daughter and five noble sons, as they stood in that chamber of death surely felt it "privileged beyond the common walks of life, quite to the verge of heaven." As life ebbed calmly and peacefully away, how forcibly the lines of Scripture came to mind: "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace." Let us trust that the prayer of each heart there was, "Let me die the death of the righteous and let my last end be like his." May heaven soothe each sorrowing heart, and may each prepare to meet him above.

"There, with the saints in glory crowned, He lives, from pain and sorrow, free Heir of eternal happiness, And immortality!"

No longer will earth's shadowy clouds His heavy vision dim, O glorious lot, to live in Christ, And die in Christ, like him!"

Raleigh, Aug. 30, 1890.

Victorious Vance.

(Farmer Chief.)

From the blue mountains of the West to the blue waves of the East, from every Democratic newspaper; from district, county and township conventions; from Sub-Alliances; from the farmer, the merchant, the mechanic and the laborer comes up a unanimous chorus of emphatic endorsement of Senator Vance as his own successor.
